COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

In the money market, there is the reaction to extreme ease in rates which might be naturally expected from late occurrences. Many Wall street firms occurrences. Many Wall street firms have become disqualified for borrowing; the exceptionally low prices of securities and gold have reduced the requirements of borrowers; and there has consequently been, within the last two weeks, a heavy contraction in the loans of the banks, while their reserve of legal tenders and gold has been largely augmented. The course of exchange at the Western cities has turned in favor of New York; and although not so decidedly as to induce remittances of currency in this direction, yet perhaps sufficiently to warrant the expectation that there will be no outlow of currency in this direction, yet perhaps sufficiently to warrant the expectation that there will be no online of money from here to that section for the remainder of the fall, bayond some moderate amounts. moderate smounts of the smaller denominations of notes, when the Treasury is prepared to distribute the new issues. Under these conditions, the rate on call loans has declined to 5a6 per cent. Some moderate amounts of currency are being sent to the South, principally to New Orleans; and the remittances to that section would be still larger were it possible to get the requisite amount of small notes. We have now reached the period when Cotton is moved from the interior to the ports with especial activity; and it is to be expected that the South will make liberal demands for money upon New York moderate amounts of the smaller de demands for money upon New York within the next few weeks. The extent of this demand must be the prin cipal condition determining the course of the money market in the immediate future. In our late circulars we have assigned reasons for anticipating that the demand from this source will be moderate, and we find no reason for modifying the views then expressed. Upon the whole, then, the conditions of the market appear to foreshadow a steady movement in money, and the more so as to the decision of the Sceretary of the Treasury, in favor of holding the $50,000,000 reserve of United States Notes available for the redemption of the 3 per cent. Certificipal condition determining the course redemption of the 3 per cent. Certifi-cates, has a direct tendency to discourage speculative attempts to 'lock up age speculative attempts to 'lock up' currency. This general conclusion, however, must be received with liberal allowances for what may arise out of the Southward flow of currency. Last year, the New York banks held on October 10th $60,000,000 of legal tenders, and on the 7th of November $47,000,000, the loss of $13,000,000 arising almost entirely from remittances to the South. On the 9th inst, the banks held $62,600,000 legal tenders, or $7,400,000 less than at the corresponding period of last 600,000 legal tenders, or $7,400,000 leas than at the corresponding period of last year. Under these circumstances, the outflow of currency to the South for the next few weeks must be watched with some interest, not to say solici-with some interest, not to say solicitude.

United States Bonds, though remarkably steady through the panic, have since exhibited an extreme duliness. The fact that bonds have declined only 3a4 per cent, while stocks have ranged 10a20 per cent below average prices, has naturally induced extensive exchanges of the former for the latter. The supply thus brought upon the market has been taken up, partly by the purchases of the Treasury, and partly by speculative buyers on the supposition that prices would recover the late standard. The low price of gold, however, has been against any advance in the currency value of bonds. Usually, at the beginning of November, considerable shipments of Five-Twenties are made to Europe, to provide for a demand for the reinvestment of the interest then payable. The fact, however, that foreign bankers in this city have recently sold out their stock indicates that they do not anticipate any large demand from this source; this expectation being based apparently upon the fact that European dealers perfer buylng. being based apparently upon

The Next Gold Swindle. the hardest of all the twelve for the commercial community to weather. It marks the period when the money of the country is fully employed in moving of the crops, and consequently, when a peculiar stringency is felt. Speculators like Vanderbilt are said to shape the course of their operations for the entire year, so as to take due advantage of this regularly recurring 'tightness' of November. The time chosen for the plot is therefore good. It doesn't follow, though, that the plot will be more successful than the last one. We apprehend that the Treasury reserve of cash is big enough to crush a money corner in November as well as it did in September, and we have no fears that the Administration will hesitate to do it.:
